According to an NBGH Quick Survey, 88% of large employers believe caregiving will become an increasingly important issue in the next five years. Our aging population, increased prevalence of chronic diseases, delayed retirement, higher divorce rates among Baby Boomers, geographically dispersed families, and shortage of trained caregivers is causing an unprecedented caregiver crunch. As more employees assume the second (unpaid) shift of caring for a loved one, employers need to understand the impact of caregiving on employee well-being and business priorities and take action to help working caregivers thrive.

“There are only four kinds of people in the world: Those who have been caregivers. Those who currently are caregivers. Those who will be caregivers, and those who will need caregivers.”

WHAT CAREGIVERS WANT—AND NEED

Unum asked working caregivers what employers could do to better accommodate caregiving responsibilities. The most common responses included:

- Flexible Schedule: 67%
- Paid Family Leave: 50%
- Ability to Work from Home: 42%
- Reduced Hours: 28%

89% say an employer’s paid family leave policies are very or somewhat important when considering an employment opportunity, and that number is greater for millennials at 95%.

85% say they’d be very or somewhat likely to use a mobile app to help manage their leave.

CONCLUSION

Future-focused companies are embracing flexible, innovative solutions to help employees manage daily caregiving tasks and avert health and economic consequences for individuals, businesses and our society. Show caregivers you care by offering benefits to support their physical, emotional and financial health, giving them the gift of time through a comprehensive leave program and flexibilities and creating a safe, positive work environment to boost engagement, morale and retention.
